DEAR COLLEAGUE,

We are pleased to invite you to the 9-11 Summit: Courts in the Aftermath of September 11th.

In the wake of September 11th, the New York State courts, and indeed courts across the nation, faced unique challenges. Now, ten months later, courts continue to grapple with the impact of that day, as well as with the need to plan for future emergency situations. With all state court leaders confronting issues ranging from security concerns to the development of fail-safe communications, automation and records access systems, the New York State Unified Court System and the court systems of Virginia, the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania and Oklahoma are co-hosting a national 9-11 Summit to discuss what we have learned from the events of September and other disasters, and where we go from here.

The Summit, which is also being hosted by the National Center for State Courts, Pace University and the Center for Court Innovation in

New York, will bring together the leadership of the judiciary, court administration, the bar, academia and the executive and legislative branches. It will be held September 25-27, 2002 at the Marriott Financial Center in Lower Manhattan, adjacent to the World Trade Center site.

The effort to maintain our rule of the law in an uncertain and volatile environment requires close collaboration and communication among leaders and policymakers in all branches of government, law enforcement and the business community. In order to be successful, a national convention on disaster-related experience and response must include the widest possible spectrum of participants. The 9-11 Summit will provide an opportunity for such discussion as well as produce published materials that we anticipate providing to policymakers nationwide. We look forward to seeing you in New York in September.

VERY TRULY YOURS,

Judith S. Kaye
Jonathan Lippman

8:30 – 8:45 A.M.

WELCOME

8:45 – 10:15 A.M.

PLENARY SESSION

LEADING THE COURTS:

The First Seven Days

Everyone believes that their court facilities will not be targeted for a terrorist attack, or that disasters, natural or man-made, only happen to other people. Yet, as we are all too aware, catastrophic events can happen to anyone, at any time. Hurricanes, floods, fire, and earthquakes, as well as terrorism and civil disorder all threaten the ability of the courts to remain open. During this plenary session, judges and court administrators will discuss challenges they faced when presented with a catastrophic event and the critical leadership and policy making roles they each played in the first hours and days following the event.

10:30 - 11:45 P.M.

CONCURRENT PANELS

THE AFTERMATH: Court Administration and Practice Issues

Court systems must take action in the face of natural or man-made disasters. The actions needed can include relocating courts to temporary quarters, suspending state statutes of limitation, extending motion filing and response deadlines, expediting court procedures, recreating or restoring documents, and developing systems of contacting employees, jurors, litigants and attorneys. This panel will discuss the steps that court leaders have taken when faced with a disaster.

GETTING THE WORD OUT:

Communication, Coordination, Collaboration

In responding to a disaster, court policymakers must decide what message to send, to whom and how to send it. Court administrators and public information officers will address policy and practical issues surrounding internal and external communications during and following a disaster, including communicating with: court personnel; court users (e.g., the bar, jurors, and litigants); other government agencies; and, the public.

THE BAR RESPONSE: Legal Assistance for Victims and Families

Large scale disasters may create a large demand for legal services among victims and their families. Members of state, national and specialty bars will discuss how to devise a disaster relief program and how to mobilize a pro bono effort in the immediate aftermath of a disaster. Their discussion will address the challenges of providing effective representation to meet the short and long-term legal needs of victims and their families and the special considerations that arise in mobilizing a pro bono effort to meet these needs.

AFTERNOON SESSION

1:15 - 2:30 P.M.

PLENARY SESSION

SAFETY AND SECURITY POLICY

ISSUES FACING COURT

ADMINISTRATORS

Disasters and potential threats challenge a court system's ability to ensure a safe and secure court environment. During this plenary session, court administrators and public and private security experts will discuss the lessons learned from their experience with disasters and describe procedures for addressing potential threats. Panelists will describe the decisions that must be made in emergency situations and discuss who should be responsible for making those decisions. Other issues to be explored include: the importance of collaborating with public and private entities; budget and fiscal considerations and design and facilities planning issues; and the impact of increased security on court access, especially with respect to the public and the bar.

2:45 - 4:00 P.M.

CONCURRENT PANELS

SAFEGUARDING COURT RECORDS:

Paper, Microfiche and Automated Data

Court systems must engage in substantial amounts of record keeping, including paper records, image based records (e.g., microfilm and fiche), and automated data records. This session will enumerate threats to key court system records and examine ways in which such records can be protected or, when necessary, recovered or restored.

OUT OF THE GOODNESS OF OUR HEARTS: Managing the 9-11 Charities

The legal and policy implications of the outpouring of charitable donations following September 11 exceeded all other similar efforts and are still unfolding. This panel will explore the New York experience and the experiences of other states in managing and coordinating the charitable response to disaster. Issues addressed will include: regulatory and enforcement issues; the challenges of defining the terms "disaster" and "victims"; and the role of government agencies in monitoring solicitation and distribution of gifts.

NEW THREATS: Bioterrorism

Chemical and biological terrorism threaten our most valuable resource: our people. Scientific and legal experts will educate attendees on the nature and risk of these new threats. The panel will discuss the potential strategies for responding to and preventing chemical and biological attacks and the costs of implementing these strategies.

FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 27

8:30 - 10:00A.M.
PLENARY SESSIONEMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS PLANS:
An Overview of Policy and Practice Issues

Writing a preparedness plan requires courts to think in new directions and consider circumstances outside normal business operations. A panel of court administrators and private industry representatives will discuss how they developed their plans and what the plans include. These state and federal court administrators will discuss the policy implications and decision making process involved in creating and implementing a plan focusing on the collaborative effort needed between the courts administrators, and local, state, and national officials.

10:15 - 11:30A.M.
CONCURRENT PANELSTHE COST OF PREPAREDNESS:
Budget Issues and Funding Opportunities

This panel will explore public and private funding available for preparedness programs. The discussion will cover risk assessment and business continuity planning. Panelists will review the elements of a reasonable cost-benefit analysis of disaster preparedness plans and explore how the costs may be met.

NEW THREATS: Cyberterrorism

With increasing dependence upon computers, computer networks and the Internet comes increasing vulnerability to this new threat. A panel of technical and legal experts will educate attendees on the nature, extent and potential costs of these new threats. The panel will discuss how to assess the risks and how best to prepare for and respond to cyber-attacks.

THE LEGAL AFTERMATH:
Terrorism Laws and Disaster - Related Litigation

In the days immediately following September 11, Congress and state legislatures passed laws criminalizing "terrorism", expanding the powers of law enforcement and granting aid to victims. This panel will explore how these laws have begun to alter the administration of criminal and civil justice. This panel will consider whether court systems and the bar should anticipate an onslaught of disaster-related litigation and whether it will arise out of existing law or be generated by this new legislation. The panel will address the steps that courts have taken to prepare for disaster-related increases in caseloads.

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS PLANS: A Practical Workshop

In this interactive 'how-to' session, a panel of court administrators and members of the public and private sector who have written and implemented emergency preparedness plans will explore with attendees the detailed process of developing and implementing these plans. Panelists will address issues such as the formation of a planning committee, the elements of a plan, approval and funding of a plan, plan distribution and where responsibility for staff training, plan updates and ongoing administration of the plan should reside within the organization. Attendees are asked to bring copies of their existing plans for discussion.
